

Webb Weekly – Those Hot Summer Nights

There is just something magical that happens on summer nights. All the lightning bugs twinkling in the trees, a crackling campfire, a clear night sky, coyotes howling off in the distance, and friends gathered outside just to take it all in. It's just the best.

My favorite summer evenings are when we gather with our friends outside at our bar, everyone brings over big old steaks, and we throw them right over an open fire on our homemade grate my husband made for over our campfire pit. Everyone brings a side dish, we have food galore, and later make s'mores into the evening. Why does grilling in the summer taste better than doing it any other months?

My new thing this year is kabobs. Chicken, steak, and shrimp loaded on a skewer with peppers. I can't get enough! I'm so ready for our first cookout for the year with our crew and making a bunch of these. Our crew is such a fun bunch. It seems food always brings us together. Meeting for dinner at different restaurants every weekend or in the summer around a fire like I was saying. We are so incredibly blessed to have the friends we do. They are family. We are all just happy together.

So whether you see your friends weekly, monthly, or try as often as you can in these busy lives we live, pick up your phone, call a few friends, and with a little prep you can have a hot summer night filled with these delicious, simple kabobs and pair it with a simple salad, side of beans, and macaroni and cheese. These are the kind of nights that make memories. And I am an old sap when it comes to makin' memories!

Food brings people together. Hot summer nights bring people together. I like to make it happen and for you to have fun simple recipes to enjoy on nights like these.

Enjoy them while it's this time of year and spend time with the ones you love. You can find the recipe here...
